ABSTRACT

Organizations that concern themselves with the problems of hunger and food distribution are listed in this directory. Each listing includes a U.S. address, phone number, contact person, brief description, and publications. The first category, "Governmental Organizations," is further divided under the headings: United Nations System; other multilateral organizations; U.S. federal agencies; and Congress. "Private Agencies-Global Focus" includes: information/education; policy oriented research; legislation/voter education; appropriate technology; private voluntary organizations in foreign assistance; and religious organizations. "Private Agencies-National Focus" describes agencies involved with: federal food programs; United States food system; poverty research and action; and local self-reliance. The last division is a geographic one: the seven regions of the United States. (BZ)

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The Development Education Program of the U.S. Agency for International Development is the principal sponsor of this revised, fourth edition of WHO'S INVOLVED WITH HUNGER. The AID program was initiated in fiscal year 1981 to carry out the objectives of the amendment by Senators Joseph Biden and Clayborne Pell to the foreign assistance act. The AID Development Education Program responds to congressional mandate to facilitate widespread public discussion, analysis, and review of the issues raised in the Report of the Presidential Commission on World Hunger (March 1980). The Presidential Commission sponsored the second editon of WHO'S INVOLVED WITH HUNGER in 1979.

Other sponsors for whose support in this project World Hunger Education Service is very grateful include, in addition to one anonymous corporate donor, the following: CARE, Catholic Relief Services, Christian Children's Fund, CODEL, ComputerLand Corporation, Dick Gregory Health Enterprises, the Hunger Project, the International Trade and Development Education Foundation, the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, the U.S. Development Education Office of the Mennonite Central Committee, the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, the Office on Global Education of Church World Service, Save the Children Federation, James and Marjorie Akins, Anna and Will Alexander, Bartlett Harvey, Edward Hawkins, and Marshall Matz.

The editors also thank Teresa Eyring, Antoinette Robinson, Bard Shollenberger, Elizabeth Weaver, and David Williams for valuable assistance at important stages of the project.

Finally, since each new edition of WHO'S INVOLVED WITH HUNGER benefits from the work that has gone before, the editors are pleased to acknowledge their debt to Linda Worthington who edited the 1982 edition, and to the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation which made it possible for World Hunger Education Service to begin the series in 1976.

PRIVATE VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS IN FOREIGN ASSISTANCE (PVOs)

Editor's Explanation: There are several hundred U.S.-based voluntary organizations (PVOs) that are involved with hunger by providing aid to people in low income countries—food, shelter and health care or materials, training and technical assistance for all kinds of development projects. These organizations are listed and described in three reference books prepared by the Technical Assistance Information Clearinghouse (TAICH) of the American Council of Voluntary Agencies for Foreign Service. Although TAICH and its parent agency were discontinued in 1984, these three volumes and other TAICH publications are still available for purchase through UNIPUB, Box 1222, Ann Arbor, Michigan 48106:

U.S. NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS IN DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE ABROAD, Eighth Edition, 1983 ($24.50).
CENTRAL AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN: DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE ABROAD, 1983. ($14.50).
EAST AFRICA: DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE ABROAD, 1984. ($14.50).

Selecting which PVOs to include in this volume has not been easy. Other than the three listed under "Appropriate Technology" for their special reputation in that field, we stress those PVOs which are particularly active in that specialty within the growing field of global education called "development education."

Development education attempts to help people in "high income" nations better understand "development" in low income countries—the nature of the development process, its challenges and obstacles, the many possible paths to progress, and how all of this relates to the high income nations. An increasing number of PVOs have come to consider such educational work among the U.S. public so important that they have added staff expressly for development education, in addition to and separate from staff who are engaged in teaching potential supporters about the PVO itself.

There is often a fine line between self-promotion and development education. For the user who wishes to support a particular PVO, that line may not matter. For someone who needs "generic" development information, however, material that includes "brand name" advertising can be unsuitable and even embarrassing in some contexts. Advertising by its very purpose must be held suspect of bias and exclusivity, no matter how educationally useful some of the information contained within the advertising might be.

In examining the materials and programs various PVOs are offering as development education, therefore, the editors of this guide applied two additional criteria in selecting which PVOs to include here. First, is the information focused narrowly on the PVO's own particular work and projects or does it provide a broader context for understanding development in which many people and organizations have roles to play? Second, if the PVO's name appears in the text of the information, does it appear as the sole illustration of an organization involved in development or as one among others? A positive answer to the latter alternative in each question in at least some of a PVO's educational work tilted the balance in favor of inclusion here.

A broader reference to PVO educational work for the U.S. public is available in a TAICH publication titled DEVELOPMENT EDUCATION PROGRAMS OF U.S. NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS: A DIRECTORY OF DOMESTIC DEVELOPMENT EDUCATION PROGRAMS SPONSORED BY U.S. NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS INVOLVED IN OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE, 1983, ($11.50). This directory is available from Interaction, listed below.

With the demise of TAICH, two consortia of PVOs, Interaction and PACT, are now the best source of current information on the activities, executive staff and addresses of U.S. PVOs.

INTERACTION (American Council for Voluntary International Action) Founded 1984.

200 Park Avenue South, New York, NY 10003. 212-777-8210. President: Peter Davies. Program Officer for Development Education: Tom Keehn. Washington D.C. office: 2101 L St. NW, Suite 916, Wash. DC 20037. 202-822-8429. Director: Christine Burbach. ##A broadly-based participatory association of over 120 PVOs working in international development, relief, refugee assistance, reconstruction, public policy/federal relations, and development education. Complements and enhances the effectiveness of member organizations and the PVO community as a whole. Formed by a merger of Private Agencies in International Development (PAID) and the American Council of Voluntary Agencies for Foreign Service (ACVFS). Publications: A Framework for Development Education in the United States (free); list of others available.

PACT (Private Agencies Collaborating Together) Founded 1969.

77 United Nations Plaza, New York, NY 10017. 212-697-6222. Executive Director: Thomas T. Bryne. ##An international consortium of 24 U.S. and Third World PVOs working in developing countries directly with persons whose access to resources is limited. The annual report included an informative description of projects along with access information to the member PVOs.

RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS

Editor's Note: Most organized religious bodies have programs to educate and activate their membership on issues of hunger and poverty, both in the USA and abroad. Although some stress domestic U.S. problems while others concentrate on needs within the countries of Asia, Africa, Latin America and Oceania, all teach about both to some degree. This directory describes only those religious organizations whose hunger-related education services or public policy actions extend to a public beyond the membership of any one faith group. For quick reference, the names of these organizations are repeated below.

Also listed here are the national headquarters of some of those faith groups which have particularly active education for their own membership. For a more complete guide to hunger education and action programs of religious judicatories, consult Bread for the World, Interfaith Action for Economic Justice, and the National Council of Churches' Working Group on Domestic Hunger and Poverty (see below).
